

Rationale

The European Seminars in Respiratory Medicine (ESRM), endorsed by the European Respiratory Society (ERS), represented an outstanding series of scientific event, in the ninties up to the early beginning of this century.

The aim is to take a new life to this event with contents facing the advances in respiratory medicine with a multidisciplinary approach, offering a unique occasion for specialists in Respiratory Medicine involved in Basic and Clinical Research to discuss the most topical and debated subjects at a top level forum guided by an expert panel of authors.

This Seminar will focus on the optimal care of the COPD patient requiring an individualized, patient-centered approach that recognizes and treats all aspects of the disease, addresses the systemic effects and co-morbidities, and integrates medical care among health care professionals and across health care sector. In many ways the integration of medical care for COPD is still in its infancy, and its implementation will undoubtedly represent a paradigm shift in our thinking.

To each topics are reserved to a series of presentations by an "expert panel" of researchers and clinicians, with adequate space for debate. Communication between speakers and audience is based on a interactive model inside the "Workshop", where the attendees will be subdivided in two groups according to the individual preference. The most controversial issues are discussed in "Meet the expert" seminars for small groups to discuss topical subjects in more depth with interactive tutorial will be available.

The attendance is strictly limited to 100: selection of participants is based, in order of priority, age (younger specialists are privileged).
